RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Doctoral Research, University of California, Davis, 10/04 – 1/2012.

Using Sacramento, California as the site for a case study on the 2007 mortgage meltdown, I argue that historical patterns of residential segregation and intensive bank deregulation are important causes of racialized subprime loan concentration and foreclosures in US cities. The case study reveals how socio-cultural directives that identified and assigned residential location took form as complex market conditions allowing racial segregation to occur in cities. The case study also demonstrates how the fusion of both explicit and supposedly race-neutral or “colorblind” housing market practices set the stage for present-day subprime mortgage activity and foreclosure concentration in the city of Sacramento. Finally, the study reflects how global financial innovation is intrinsically connected to cities, both influencing and influenced by local narratives that shape community as well as local economy.

Masters Research, University of California, Davis, 10/2003 – 9/2004.

Applied historical processes of spatial stratification to Federal Home Mortgage Disclosure Act (HMDA) loan data. Identified relationships between historical housing and housing finance policy and the concentration of subprime mortgage usage in neighborhoods historically populated with high ratios of minority residents in Sacramento, California. Created GIS models of subprime loan geography to determine relationship to historical patterns of mortgage redlining.

Please state the reason you would like to be a member of this board/commission (or attach):

I have spent the last seven years working in different capacities with low income families and individuals in Sacramento. I am drawn to this commission as an opportunity to use my experience and skills to continue to make a difference in the lives of people in our community. As harsh economic times have decreased funding for non-profits and their services, the assistance this commission provides is crucial. I bring to the commission extensive knowledge of local community resources, public benefits and hunger issues. Through a five month boards and commissions training I learned to interpret and analyze local government financial statements along with other skills which will allow me to succeed as a commissioner. I am excited to serve the City of Sacramento on a commission whose goals I am passionate about.

As a commissioner, I would abstain from participating in all matters relating to any funding for RCFB. My responsibilities with RCFB do not include or relate in anyway to applying for funding from the commission.
